3 principles to obtain a meeting

- 1 To start as winner
- 2 To prepare
- 3 To keep your goal in mind

What's Steps ?

Always give preference to calls for prospecting sessions

Préparation

1. To update/ to know last contact / to create a prospecting file

Customer history: Last call, and presentation

To know their needs, obstacles to work with us

2. To legitimate your call

To share analyses, To use name dropping, to be expert of their market...

To start a winner

= be in high spirits + To dare + Spontaneity

Presentation

Your prospect doesn't know you
TO CREATE AN ELEVATOR PITCH
short & Straight to the point

An elevator pitch is a clear and precise statement of who you are, what you do and the specific value of your product/ solution on the market its name comes from the fact that the formula is so concise that it can be expressed in an elevator ride and still arouse interest

40 Wordings in 25 seconds

Golden rules to have an impact

Smile + Talk only about your appointment

1/ Teaser sentence: SIMPLE & SHORT

I'd like to meet you to see how we can meet your marketing objectives

2/ Development sentence: arouse interest

You are losing 10% of your volumes on and we can contribute x tonnes/ pt NA

3/ Responding to objections: ALL OBJECTIONS

That's precisely the purpose of the meeting/ That's why we need to meet.

4/ Alternative dates

next week or the week after 5/ Ask about their context, actuality, issues, objectives ...

brief to come with support tailored to their expectations

6/ Conclude

How do you grab contact's attention ?

Reprise or Recommendation (you come from)

Information (Did you know ?)

Straight to the point (we are working with your competitors, but we aren't working with you ...)

Compliment (Congrat for your award)

Question (how do you support the launch of your product)

X what do you do ?

To explain your product or Solution in less 20- 30s
With a practical/ specific example

Call manager of an Carrefour supermarket

Call a senior student

Obstacles = Refocus on the goal of the meeting

My budget is complete: I understand that you have already made progress with your plans. That doesn't mean we can't meet: this doesn't commit you to anything and it will be a first working basis for later on or if you have budgetary opportunities during the year.

Send me a document: too general, not adapted to your marketing issues let's see...

I'm familiar with it: Very well, but where did you hear about it? What did you find interesting? Perfect, we can talk about our latest developments/innovations.

I don't have time: Don't worry, I'll be brief: in 30 minutes we've covered everything.

Fallback option: I understand that you're busy, but let's arrange a date later and we'll be done.

I'm not in charge of this: ah very well, who do I contact. Then I refer back to our conversation

Talk to my teams (CDG): We're already in contact with your teams, you're the one who makes the decisions on budget choices and trade-offs. That's why I need to discuss these points with you/ I would like to exchange with to have a macro vision in order to amliorite my support and purpose a tailor-made deal

Obstacles = Refocus on the goal of the meeting

I already have solutions, so I'm not surprised. What are you satisfied with and what could give you a plus? I'd like to give you a concrete example of how we can contribute to...

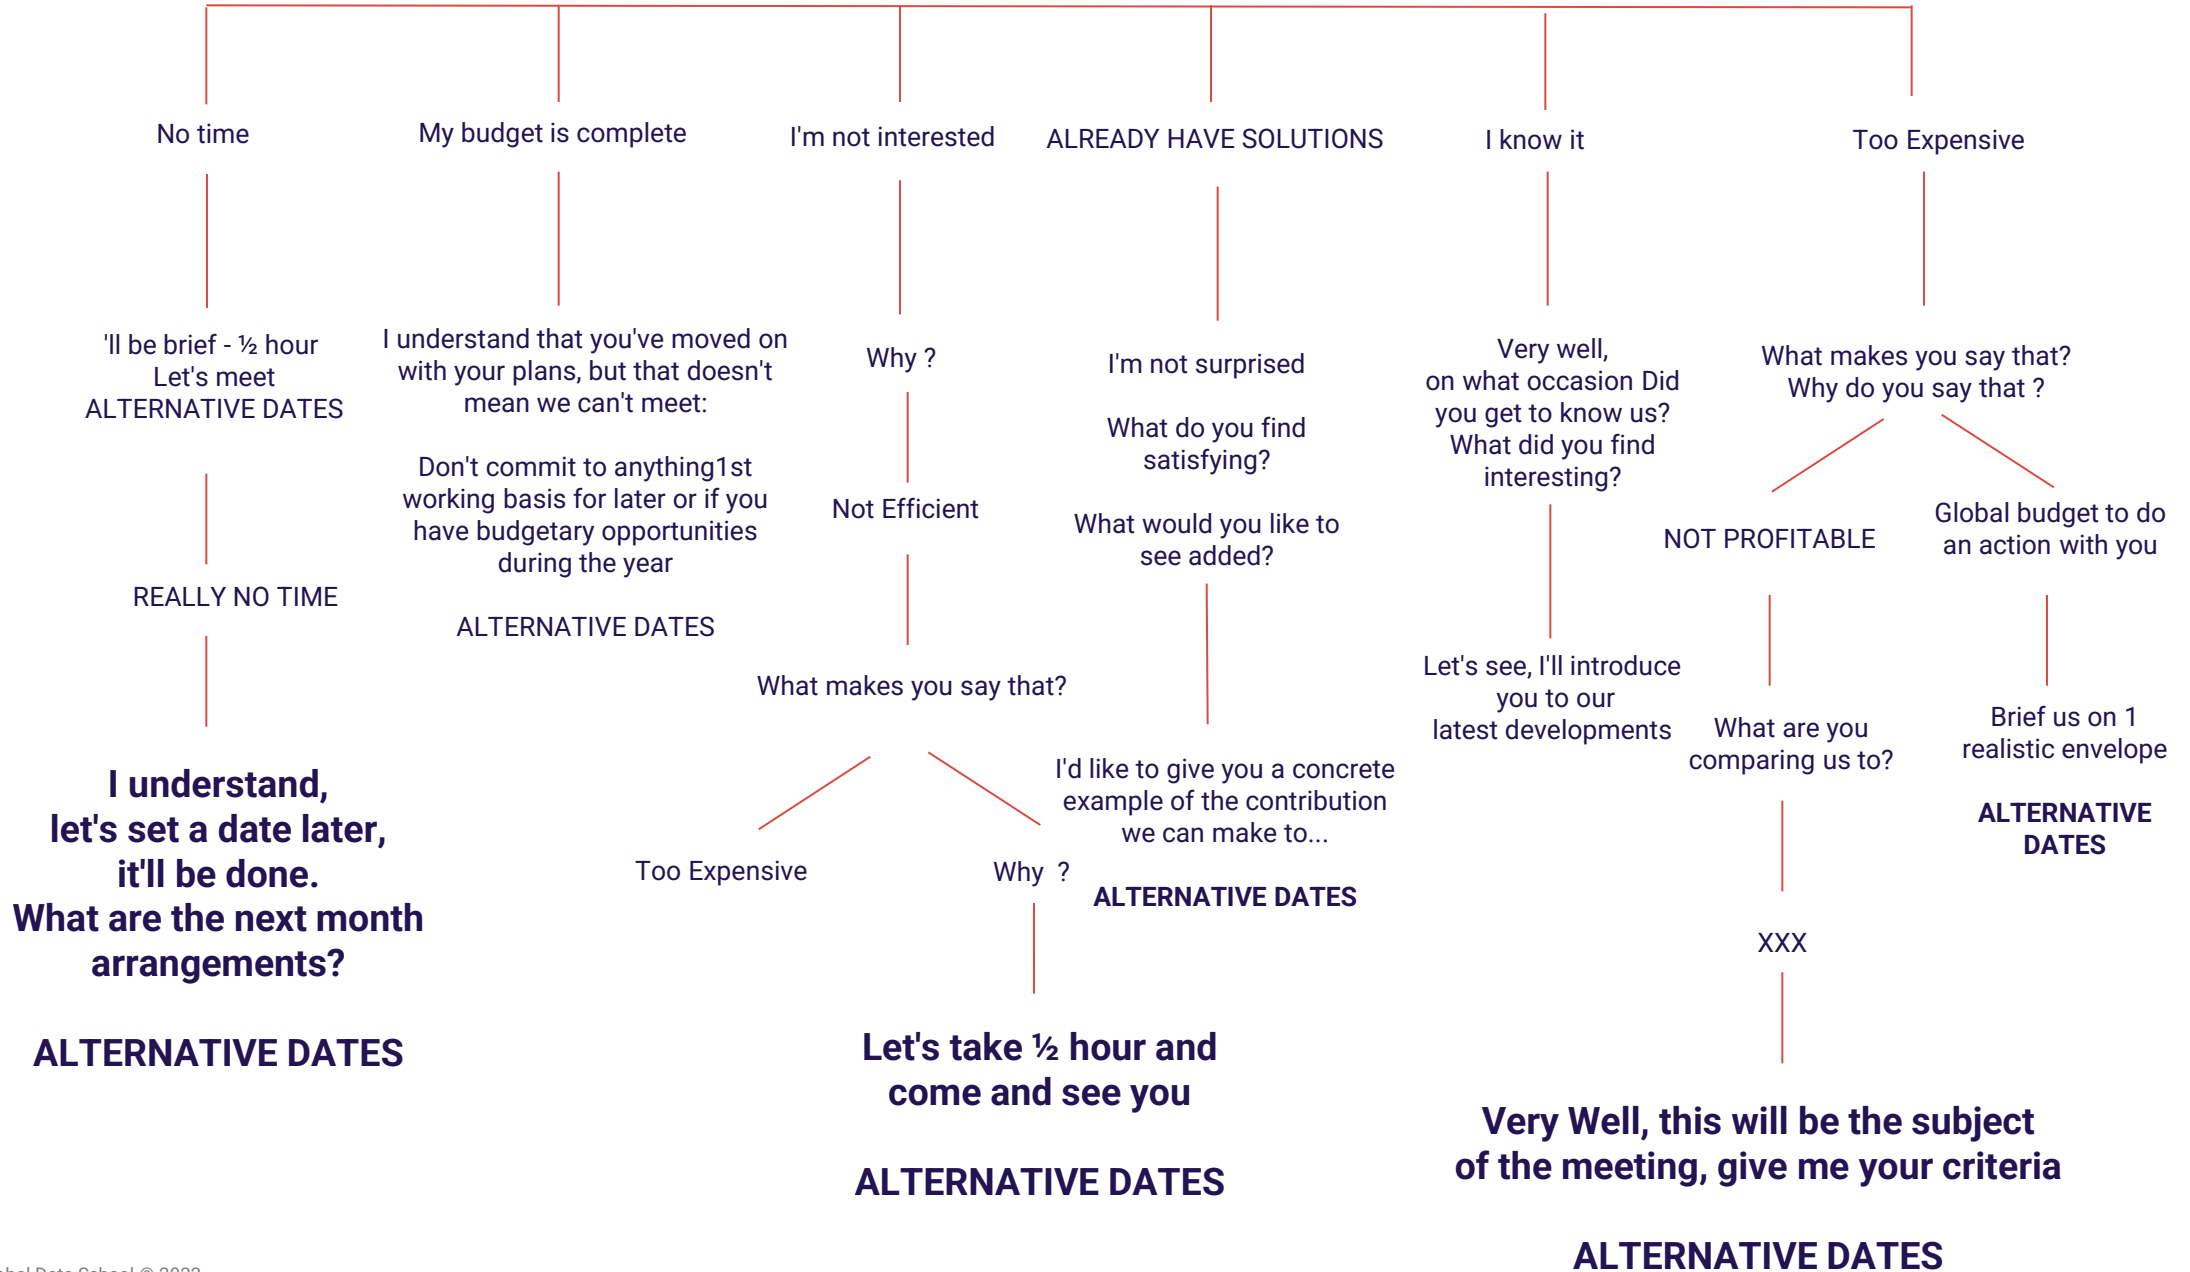

I'm not interested: why?/ I am surprised because we are working with all your competitor. what don't you like about our solutions?

Let's take 1/2 hour and I'll come and see you.

I only do XXX : I know, that's why I want to meet you / complementary benefits of XX and our solution/ product

You're too expensive: That's one of the points we'll be discussing at our meeting.

I can't leave you with this false impression... Let's meet on ...

... That's why i would like to meet you ...

To demonstrate the contribution, we can make to your brands

To make concrete proposals to optimise our partnership

To discuss 2 important subjects with you: xx and yy

To provide precise answers to your questions/objections

To give you a concrete example of the contribution (ROI) we can make to...

When you are blocked !

I understand that is not the moment to exchange about this subject. can you tell me when is it the right moment please vs building budget ?

Can you tell me what are your brakes on my solution and why ?

Can you recommend someone to call on your behalf and who is the decison maker on the choice of marketing and budget ?

Keep the rythm

There's no need for very detailed preparation for the 1st contact!

It's better to do 1 hour on sourcing name/ job/ email than read the specialised press and to be an expert of the market

Active Listening

Active listening is a method of communication (create by Carl Rogers in 40's) that involves listening to the other person with attention, empathy and in a non-directive way. This method, also known as sympathetic listening, establishes a climate of trust in which the other person feels comfortable speaking without judgement.

Active Listening : How ?

- Focus your attention on your interlocutor
- Show that you are attentive
- Rephrase regularly
- Ask for clarification if you don't understand

Active Listening / Selective listening

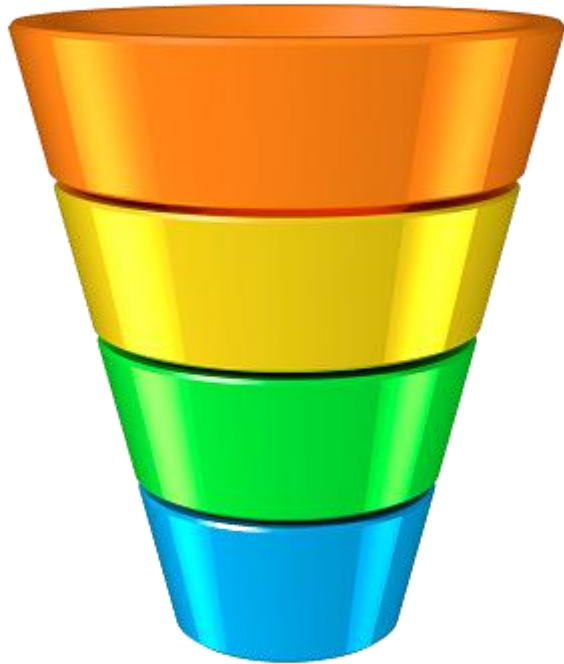

Active

- If I provide guidance
- If I maintain the relationship
- If I ask questions and get people to clarify

Selective

- If I make judgements
- If I think about what he's going to say to you
- If I interpret
- If I rephrase what he says without confirmation

Funnel questioning

At the end of the interview,
I must be able to summarise

My customer's current situation

What he expects from the solution

Next steps planned with the client

Open/closed questions

An open question is one that allows respondents to express themselves freely. No choice of response is suggested, so that they can answer as they wish, in their own words.

Generally begin with 'how', 'what', 'why'. Advantage : gather as much information as possible => to be preferred as much as possible E.g.: what is the context of your brand / what solutions are you considering / what results have you drawn from these actions?

Open/closed questions

Allow only a 'yes' or 'no' answer

Contain a maximum of presuppositions because the context is contained in the question

Useful: to get a precise and immediate answer

Disadvantage: does not allow the other person to express themselves fully on the context, no possibility of making a complete analysis of the request and discovering the customer's objectives.

Ex: Do you agree that this proposal meets your objective?

Flexible questioning

Justify your questions / state the purpose / guarantee its relevance:

e.g.: to make sure I can produce a proposal that meets your needs exactly, can you explain your background to me?

La force des métaphores

Messages complexes avec des images simples

The iceberg concept

For the customer, it is sometimes more comfortable to put forward a rational objection than to admit their true criteria for choice (irrational, emotional, political, etc.).

What the customer says:
You are expensive.

What he thinks : My boss isn't convinced. Too much Society X, I want a change....

If there is objection, there is interest...

No objections, the sea is calm... that's not a good sign...

If there really is no objection...

How can you reveal the objection, how can you get your client to talk?

□ What he can do By asking open-ended questions: What do you think of our proposal? How does it meet your objectives? What strengths do you see in it? Weaknesses? What alternatives do you have for achieving these objectives? On what points do you think your boss will challenge you?

□ By closing questions: What are the steps before the final decision? Who is involved in the decision? What criteria will you use to make your decision? What is making you hesitate? Example: My boss isn't convinced. I've done too much of Catalina, I want a change.

Handling OBJECTIONS

- 1 KEEP QUIET to reflect to show that the objection has been taken into account to let him say more
- 2 QUESTION
TOQ: transforming objections into questions to identify the real reason to clarify
- 3 REFORMULATE to check our understanding to refocus
- 4 INSULATE to be sure that this is the real problem to lock
- 5 REPLY the real reasons that we were able to get the customer to express
- 6 VERIFY Did the answer convince her?
Yes: conclude. No: return to No. 1.

Last drop technique

The power of silence : Let your customer express themselves so you can gather all their questions/objections.

7 steps

- To obtain a meeting
- To prepare your meeting
- To create a good contact
- To understand the client's needs
- To manage résistances
- To negotiate
- To handle the closing

The most common mistakes in the closing phase

Overestimating your performance: “I think he's convinced.”

Refusing to go too far: “He'll take it badly if I insist.”

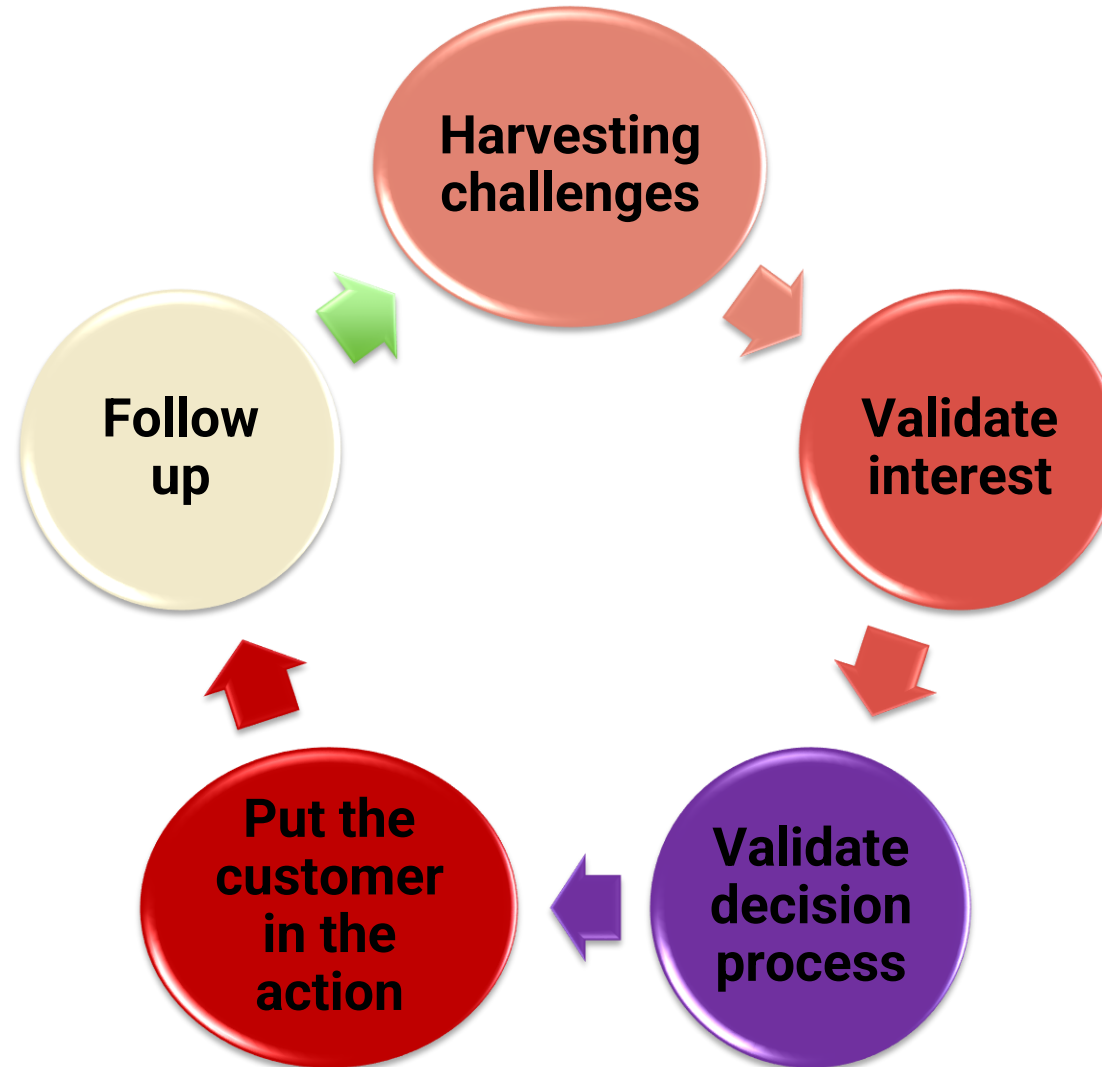

Putting it off until later: “Next time will be better.”

Mistaking the person: “He's the one who will make the decision.”

And above all, underestimating customer resistance.

ASK !

The closing starts right from the beginning.

The failure of closing often when we do not control

Who? Identification and position of all stakeholders involved (N+1, +2): covered? Positions vs. your product/service? Their obstacles? Our stakeholder's ability to carry out the project

When? Timing of the decision-making process?

How urgent is it? Understanding the stages of the decision-making process (committees, fiscal year, budget review, etc.)

How? Purchase criteria Knowledge of the steps involved in achieving a sale with our client

What brings us closer/drives us apart

Step 1: We validate interest and obtain a commitment.

What do you think of our proposal? Of the things I've presented to you, what interests you the most? If it were up to you alone,

What would you do ?

What is preventing us from working together?

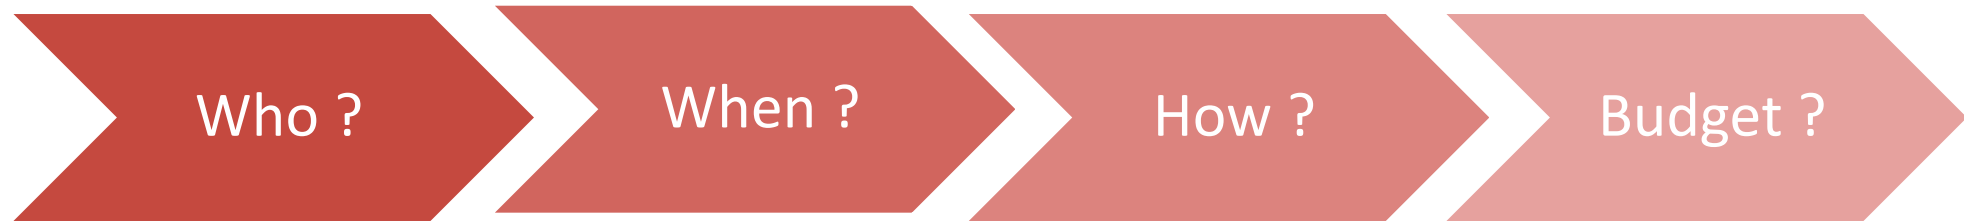

What elements do you need to be convinced of?

How can we help you defend this proposal?

Step 2: Broad open question

How can we move forward together? What is the timeline? What will the decision-making process be? What are the next steps?

Step 3: Digging

Step 3: Digging

Apart from you, who else is involved in the decision-making process?
Are they familiar with our solution/product? What do they think of it? What will be their criteria for purchasing and success? If you were the only one making the decision, what would your decision be?

Step 3: Digging

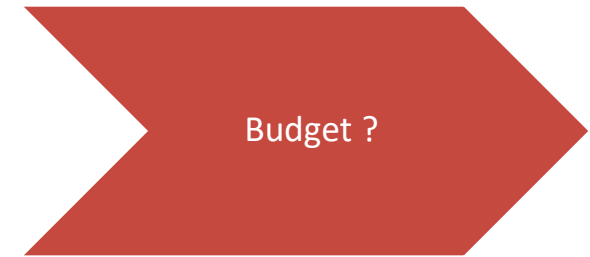

What are the next steps? When will you make your decision? Over what period of time do you want to take action?

Step 3: Digging

What are the alternative solutions? How will you compare us? What criteria will you use to make your decision? What advantages and disadvantages do you see in Catalina and the alternative solutions? What will your decision depend on? What would make you decide not to do this project with us?

Step 3: Digging

How much funding would you like to allocate?
What possibilities are there for budget reallocation?
What would enable you to obtain more funding?

Step 4: Always be one step ahead of the next step

- Leave the client with a clear vision of the next steps and mutual commitments.
- Prepare the client to deal with any objections they may face.
- Know the next step in order to prepare them.

Step 4: Do not follow up just for the sake of following up

- Get your contact to commit to a date for your next follow-up call.
- Use this information as the introduction for your next call...
- Suggest setting up a meeting with the “real” decision-maker, the person who is able to make the decision on the next step: remind each contact of their scope of action, suggest organizing a three-way meeting...

In case of deviation:

Observation: Today, you're telling me that we're not able to do this...

Reminder of the issue: Are we still in agreement on the following issues...?

Identifying the gap: What's going on? Why?

Rectifying the gap: What are we going to do? Who will do what? When?

Step 5: Knowing how to conclude

Rebalance the pressure

Know how to remind people of their commitments and responsibilities (We agreed... Why? You asked me, you seemed interested... What's going on? We've met X times... How can we move forward?) We have the right to ask for and obtain clarification.

Knowing how to speed up closing

“I don't want to hassle you on the phone... What kind of timeline can we mutually commit to?” “You don't need to lock everything down, the important thing is to reserve it, we'll figure out the action plan later.” Leverage exclusivity on our network

Be firm on the substance, flexible on the form.

Don't be overly empathetic/passive, or emotional.

Show detachment.

If necessary, toughen your tone and break the rythm.

Techniques more specific to the closing stages

Closed or semi-open questions

Would you like to run this campaign?

Are you convinced that our proposal is relevant to your challenges?

Are you interested? Who do you need to convince?

What are the chances of us working together?

How would you rate them (out of 10)?

What makes you say that?

What do you need to make a decision?

What makes you hesitate? If we meet this point, will you say yes?

Can I count on you to...?

Does the proposal fit your profitability criteria?

Funnel method, collecting YES votes:

Go over each of the positive points noted about our recommendation and acknowledged by our client.

Get their “yes” for each one, using a closed question (“lock in”).

Mastering the closing – Expected results

Form: I appear detached, although I am tenacious when it comes to substance.

Substance: I am aware that closing deals often fails because of factors beyond my control.

1- WHO: I know exactly who the decision-maker is, their criteria, their knowledge, and their position vs the solution. My contact has confirmed (or denied) that if he were the sole decision-maker, he would work with our solution.

2/ WHEN: I know exactly what my client's next steps are internally:

Timing?

With whom?

3/ HOW: I know the alternative solutions being considered and have argued our added value.

I have confirmed that I have convinced them. I know the decision criteria and my proposal is aligned with them.

My client has rephrased the advantages and disadvantages of the different solution.

I know what the decision will depend on. My client has given me the reasons why we would not be able to work together.

4/ BUDGET: I know the budget amount. I know the possibilities for renegotiation. I know the possible reasons that would allow him to obtain a larger budget. I have a clear and timed next step in the form of a contract with my client.
